On a wat and mosay stone, Shelving from the ocean shore, Sits a malten still and lone, While around the billows year.

Outward o'er the water's deep, Gazes she with straining eyes Steadfast as the stars that keep Vigil in the solemn skies.

She is dead !—that maiden fair-Marble is her paild brow, On her stony shoulders bare Muteisss fall the treases now.

Biglitless are those caruest eres.

Dried the fourtain of her tears,
Stilled the heart's consuming sighs
Banished all her hopes and fears.

Ontword o'er the ocean wide.

Thus imploringly she died To the falness of her charms. From Robert Dale Owen's "Footfalls on the Boun sry of Another World."| The Mysterious Stains of Blood.

The Mysterious Stains of Blood.

"In the year 185—I was staying, with my wife and children, at the favorite watering place of ... In order to attend to some affairs of my own, I determined to leave my family there for three or four days. Accordingly on the ... the of August, I took the railway, and arrived that evening, an unexpected guest, at ... Hall, the residence of a gentleman whose acquaintance I had recently made, and with whom my sister was then staying.

made, and with whom my sister was then staying.

"I arrived late, soon afterward went to bed, and before long fell asleep. Awakening after three or four hours, I was not surprised to find I could sheep no more; for I never rest well in a strange bed. After trying, therefore, in vain again to induce sleep I arranged my plans for the day.

"I had been engaged some little time in this way, when I became suddenly sensible that there was a light in the room. Turning round, I distinctly perceived a female figure; and what attracted my special attention was, that the light by which I saw It emanated from itself. I watched the figure attentively. The features were not perceptible. After moving a little distance, it disappeared as suddenly as it had appeared.

"My first thoughts were that there was some trick. I immediately got out of bed, struck a light, and found my bedroom-door still locked. I then carefully examined the walls, to ascertain if there were any other concealed means of entrance or exit, but none could I find. I drew the curtains and opened the shutters; but all outside was silent and dark there heigh any more consider.

could I find. I drew the curtains and opened the shutters; but all outside was silent and dark, there being no moonlight.

"After examining the room well in every part, I betook myself to bed and thought calmly over the whole matter. The final impression on my mind was, that I had seen something supernatural, and, if supernatural, that it was in some way connected with my wife. What was the appearance? What did it mean? Would it have appeared to me if I had been asleep instead of awake? These were questions very easy to ask and very difficult to answer cult to answer

ficult to answer

"Even if my room door had been unlocked, or if there had been a concealed entrance to the room a practical joke was out of the question. For in the first place, I was not on such intimate terms with my host as to warrant such a liberty; and, secondly, even if he had been so inclined to sanction so questionable a reaction has was too unwell at the ble a proceeding, he was too unwell at the time to permit me for a moment to entertain such a supposition.

"In doubt and uncertainty I passed the rest of the night; and in the morning, descending early, I immediately told my sister what had occurred, describing to her accuracy everything connected with the appearance. I had winessed. She seemed much rately everything connected with the appearance I had witnessed. She seemed much struck with what I told her, and replied, 'It is very odd, for you have heard, I dare say, that a lady was, some years ago, murdered in this house but it was not in the room you slept in. I answered, that I had never heard any thing of the kind, and was beginning to make further inquiries about the murder, when I was interrupted by the entrance of our host and hostess, and afterward by breakfist.

After breakfast I left, without having had y opportunity of renewing the conversa-n. But the whole affair had made upon any opportunity of renewing the conversation. But the whole affair had made upon me an impression which I sought in vain to shake off. The female figure was ever before my mind's eye, and I became fidgety and muxious about my wife. 'Could it in any way be connected with her!' was my constantly occurring thought. So much did this weigh on my mind that, instead of attending to the business for the express purpose of transactions which I had left my family. I returned to them by the first train; and it was only when I saw my wife and children in good health, and everything safe and well in my household that I felt satisfied that, whatever the nature of the appearance might have been, it was not connected with any evil to the m.

"On the Wednesday following, I received a letter from my sister, in which she informed that, since I had left, she had ascertained that the mourder was committed in the very pears at 5665%c; Soda ash at 33%c., and Bi me that, since I had left, she had ascertained that the murder was committed in the very room in which I had slept. She added that she purposed visiting us next day, and that she would like me to write out an account of what I had seen, together with a plan of the room, and that on that plan she wished me to mark the place of the appearance, and of the disappearance, of the figure.

This I immediately did; and the next day, when my sixter arrived, she asked me if I had complied with her request. I replied pointing to the drawing-room table. Yes there is the account of the plan. As she rose to examine it, I prevented her, saying, the not look at it until you have told me all you have to say, because you might unintentionally color your story by what you may read there.

there. "Thereupon she informed me that she had the carpet taken up in the room I had occupied, and that the marks of blood from the murdered person were there, plainly visible, on a particular part of the floor. At my ge-quest she then drew a plan of the room, and marked upon it the spote which still bore traces of blood.

The two plans-my sister's and mine were then compared, and we verified the most remarkable fact that the places she had marked as the beginning and ending of the traces of blood coincided exactly with the spots marked upon my plan as those on which the female figure had appeared and disapthe female figure had appeared and disappeared.

"I am unable to add anything to this plain statement of facts. I can not account, in any way, for what I aw. I am convinced no human being catered my room last night, yet I knew, being wide awake and in good health, I did distinctly see a female figure in my room. But if, as I must believe, it was a supernatural appearance, then I am unable to suggest any reason why it should have appeared to me. I can not tell whether, if I had not been in the room, or had been asleep at the time, that figure would equally have been there. As it was, it seemed connected with no warning or pressage. No misfortune of any kind happened then, or since, to me or mine. It is true that the host, at whose house I was staying when this incident occurred, and also one of his children, died a few months afterward; but I can not pretend to make out any connection between either of these deaths and the appearance I witnessed. The 'cus boso,' therefore, I do not attempt to explain. But what I distinctly saw, that, and that only, I describe."

Monday's Tribine says of Saturday's New York Money market:

There is no change whaterer in Money matters. The rates are unchanged, and the supply of Money is, if anything, larger than early in the week. The gold shipments, however, here caused several, reading the cold first class paper 56555 per cent, running up to November. The market is steady for foreign bills, with nothing doing since the steamer sailed. Sterling is 10%100% Frances, 5.185625.12%

New York:

It is possible that the revival of specie shipments may, for a time at least, impart more activity to the mousey market, and aid the surposes of lenders. But in the end the scarcity of borrowers, and the leavy secumulation of capital at all the financial centers, are sure to interpose a barrier to a return to the rates which used to be current in our money market before the crisis of 18-75. Before 18-70 to the rates which used to be current in our money market before the crisis of 18-75. Before 18-70 to the rates which used to the current in our money market before the crisis of 18-75. Before 18-70 to the market before the crisis of 18-75. Before 18-70 to 18-ties. In New Orleans Money is still close at 7½@9.

An English journal of the 21st, by the Canada, thus speaks of the improvement in the London Money market:

In the Discount market the tendency to ease becomes daily more observable. The demand at the Bank was on a fair scale, but our doors many transactions took place at 4½ per cent. In the Stock factange the rate for loans on Government securities has been 2½ per cent. In the Stock factange the rate for loans on Government securities has been 2½ per cent.

Capitalian approximation of continued reduction, approximate to railway companies on demantices, but the companies are not ready takers at the existing terms, since they of course adopt the general beilef that they will be able to do bester a few weeks hence. The fact, however, must be kept in mind that the momentary supply in the market increased by the amounts will be from time to time withdrawn in propertion as our rate again descends to a level with the rates on the Continent.

ASHES—Pots are steady at 41/204%c. Pearls at 505%c.; Soda ash at 31/2c., and Bi

BARK-The receipts are fair and the market steady at $12@12 50, BEOOMS—No change in the market. The demand is fair. We quote: BEESWAX-The market is dull, without change. It brings 28@30c. on arrival.

BEANS—The market continues very dult;
a limited local retail demand for prime white, at $1 per bushel, but other kinds are nominal, and are not saleable. BUTTER—The supply of new is fair, and prices lower. Fair to prime Central Ohio, in firkins, sells at 15@17c., and choice Western COOPERAGE—No change in prices of any ticle, and the market remains dull. We article, and the market remains dull.

prime, from store, continue to rule a 14@15c. HOGS AND CATTLE—The supply o market; the demand is fair in the regular moderate since our last, and prices ruled somewhat easier, though in the regular way there has been no important change. About 600 brls. sold at 45@46c., chiefly at the for-

Sides; holders at the close asking 174c. and 18/4c, and the market tending strongly in that direction.

Common Hams may be quoted at 9½@10c. packed, but uncanvassed and sugar-cured 11@11½c, with a fair demand.

There has been an improved demand for Bulk Meats, and 1stoes advanced fully ½c. on Shoulders and ½c. on sides. The saled during the week comprise 1,200,000 ths., at 6½@6½c. for Shoulders, and 8½@8½c. for light Sides, 8½@8½c. for medium size, and 8½@5c. for heavy, closing at 6½c. for Shoulders, 8½@8½c. for medium Sides, and 8½@5c. for heavy, the latter rate for extra large, say those averaging 45 lbs. The latter have been in demand for clearing.

Lard has been held with great firmness, and though 10½c. has been offered freely and 10½c. yesterday, the amount procured has been but small, holders asking 10½c., and in some cases 11c. There was a good deal of anxiety to bring last evenings quotations at 10½c. Keg is held at 11½c., but very little offering.
